From the Chair:

It's hard to believe that the summer is almost upon us and we only have one meeting left for the year. It's been an interesting year, and I look forward to the next.

We have a terrific organization, but it takes all of us to make it so. All of us need to be involved and pitch in. We can't leave things up to just a few. Please set a little time aside to help out in one of our many projects or if you are able, as an officer. We're still in need of a secretary. Other than our monthly meeting time, other participation time is minimal, an hour or two a month, more if you wish. This is YOUR organization too! An organization is only as good as its parts.

Summer seems to be a busy time for all of us. Hopefully you'll all be able to join us Tuesday, Aug. 5 at Birch Pavilion in Carson Park for our picnic. More information will be coming.

I hope to find time this summer to catch up on my genealogy record keeping and as much research as I can. If, during your research, you come upon a website you really like or find helpful, please let me know. Compiling a list of favorite websites may help others in their research, especially if the website goes beyond the common ones such as ancestry or familysearch.org. Keep checking our website (www.grsec.org) too as it may contain information to help in your searches. One site I just learned about is www.stevemorse.org, who has developed search tools beyond the normal. Dick Eastman's blog also gives ideas and direction for searching, <http://blog.eogn.com>.

So, thanks for a great year. Have a super, productive summer. We'll see you at the picnic and in the fall for another great year. Pat Lindholm, 715-836-7375, dustyden@att.net

Internet Websites: for BASIC Genealogy Research

These websites are only a sample of what is actually out there on the net, and it changes daily.

Updated May 2013 by Deb Jarvar

Cyndi's List – contains over 327,000 genealogy related websites. This should be your starting point in basic genealogy research.

<http://www.cyndislist.com>

Latter Day Saints (Mormon or LDS) website – search by name to find out if anyone else has already done research on your family. Check often, they load data daily.

<http://www.familysearch.org/>

Ancestry - requires membership for any more than a very basic search, however, many public libraries subscribe to Ancestry.com and it is free on library computers to library cardholders. It contains a wealth of information from census and immigration records to completed family trees.

<http://ancestry.com>

RootsWeb - is a free genealogy website supported by Ancestry. This would be a good place to post a message on your research efforts. It also has family trees under WorldConnect, similar to Ancestry and more.

<http://rootsweb.com/>

Ellis Island – search here for immigrants entering the United States through New York, you must register but it is free. Ellis Island opened in 1892. (Check Castle Garden prior to 1892.)

<http://www.ellisland.org/>

Castle Garden – in New York, this was the United States entry location for many immigrants from 1830 to 1892. Contains a searchable database.

<http://castlegarden.org/>

Passenger Lists on the Internet

One of several, The Ships List: Passengers, Ships, Shipwrecks.

<http://www.theshipslist.com/>

The Wisconsin Historical Society – a searchable database, click on Genealogy then on Vital Records for pre-1907 birth, death and marriage information, plus other databases.

<http://wisconsinhistory.org/>

Public Libraries – Many libraries subscribe to Ancestry.com and HeritageQuest (US census information from 1790-1930). Some also offer newspaper searches worldwide through ACCESS.

Eau Claire Public Library website is:

<http://www.ecpubliclibrary.info/>

US Genweb Project – provides extensive free genealogical information for every state and county in the United States. Some counties are maintained better than others.

<http://usgenweb.com/>

ISTG – Immigrant Ships Transcribers Guild, a searchable database.

<http://www.immigrantships.net/>

Google Translate – a wonderful service that allows translation of many different languages.

<http://translate.google.com/>

Find A Grave – 99 million gravesites online and growing daily, some contain photos of the tombstone. You can also request a photo of a gravestone.
<http://www.findagrave.com/>

Hint: Try using quotation marks before and after a name in Google.com to limit the search to ONLY what you typed, ex: “Hans Fretheim”. Always VERIFY what you glean from the Internet. It's only accurate as the person entering the information. Happy searching.

Do you have a favorite genealogy website you would like to share with others? One that has been especially productive? Send it to jalf4840@charter.net

Let's give Karin a hand

Wanting some quiet or alone time over the summer? How about helping with indexing a cemetery in Eau Claire County! There are several in need of updating. It is very easy to do; just walk a cemetery and verify the information on the grave marker against a print out, making any necessary changes and additions, then turn in the papers to Karin. Please contact Karin for more information.

NEIGHBOR'S NOTES

“The Pipost” published by the St. Croix Valley Genealogical Society in March 2014 stated that nearly 2000 headstones at St. Patrick's Cemetery in Hudson had been added to www.FindAGrave.com including photographs and memorials.

“The Echoes” published by Blue Hills Genealogical Society – Barron County for January and February 2014 stated that the Rice Lake Library has the Chronotype available in digitized format on the genealogy page at www.ricelakelibrary.org The Chronotype was known variously as “The Rice Lake Chronotype”, “Barron County Chronotype”, “The Chronotype”, “Rice Lake Chronotype” and “The Barron County Chronotype”. Issues that may be viewed online were printed between 1874 and 1920.

Ancestry.com has an article “4 Things To Do Before You Donate Your Genealogy” that can be accessed at <http://tinyurl.com/o2f9pd4> The author points out that, even if your will describes how you want your genealogical records distributed, in the process of breaking up the house when a loved one goes into a nursing home, family members have been known to toss items they didn't think were “important.”

AARP members can get an Ancestry.com subscription for 30% off at <http://tinyurl.com/k5oxknx>

Meet A Member: Diane Youngell

GRSEC member Diane Youngell, a Milwaukee native who now calls Eau Claire her home, has been delving into her family history since 1998. She was watching the Donny and Marie (Osmond) show and learned how to research in that way. “I thought it would be kind of interesting to learn,” she says, so she started going to the genealogy society in Milwaukee and took classes for a couple of weeks.

She had a fair amount of history from her mother's side of the family but wanted more about the family on the side of her father, Francis Youngell. She had hardly gotten started when she found a red herring had been inadvertently dragged across the trail she was following. Her father never talked much about his father, Edward Youngell, but he did say Edward, an immigrant to Florence County, Wisconsin spoke Swedish. Diane assumed from that she had a Swedish heritage. She might have floundered around in Swedish history but caught a break when the Florence County, Wisconsin library sent her obituaries of her aunts and uncles.

“Some of them were two columns long,” she says, “so I got all the history where they were from. All the older children who came for the funeral and where they were from.”

It turned out the Youngells had emigrated from Vaasa, a city on the gulf between Finland and Sweden in western Finland. She had the good fortune to be contacted by a cousin in Green Bay she had not known about. He was searching the Youngell family, too and found her in the Milwaukee phone book. From him she got more information including photos from the Florence cemetery and World War I photos of two great uncles. Having recorded that history she turned to her mother's side of the family.

Youngell's mother Ellen, age 89, has been and continues to be a rich source of information about her families, the Jaegers, (her maiden name) Thiessenhusens and Ottos (her grandmother.) “Mom has lots of photographs,” she says. “The Ottos worked on the family tree way back. That side of the family kept a lot of the records. So, I thought as long as my mom is around I should do that part. I left the Youngell side and went to my mom's, the German side, and the other Germans now.” She has had help from fellow GRS member Ken Kiesow, especially about the Jaegers who were from Lasbach, Pomerania in the Kres-Regenwald region. The Thiessenhusen branch had been done back to the 1600s. Now, she says, she is at a road block and needs help with further research.

Youngell, who relies on a wheelchair for mobility, had a promising career going when she had to have brain surgery and lost the ability to walk. She also lost some cognitive acuity, so, as she says, “Things go a little slower.” Her study area would not make a visitor think so, though. She has all the modern computer equipment and the ability to use it with her background as a transcriptionist to help.

Not being able to get around has made it difficult to establish a network of research partners so she has a wish to have friends who will interact in genealogical study. She receives e-mail at mobydi2@hotmail.com.

From the editor: I am indebted to all who contributed content to this issue. Thank you. I also appreciate your patience as I had to convert to Windows 8 when XP went obsolete. Quite a few times I had to request information several times as I lost it in transition. Now, as we take our summer break I will still be collecting items for the September issue. I am at jalf4840@charter.net
